Course Description:  The aim of the course is to acquaint students with the fields, terminology and some problems of contemporary linguistics through studying the English language. The course will try to provide a foundation for later, more specialized and detailed linguistics courses. Classes will consist of lecture-like presentations involving the students in the discussion as much as possible, and doing problem solving exercises covering some of the major branches of linguistics (language variation, phonetics and phonology, morphology, syntax, semantics, etc.). Students will be required to sit for two in-class tests, and they will also be given a short writing task connected to one of the topics covered by the course. Note that no more than 3 classes can be missed.
