Course Description:

When interacting with Japanese people as a researcher or as a member of society, it is essential to be able to communicate seamlessly with people of different ages, social statuses, and backgrounds. Particularly in Japanese, it is important to be able to use appropriate taigu communication (e.g., keigo) according to the context. However, keigo cannot be used with knowledge alone; it requires a great deal of practice. Therefore, in Modern Japanese IV, students learn the keigo expressions necessary for smooth communication and relationship building, with a focus on business situations. These expressions are then practiced repeatedly in the form of dialogues.
